"Word of honor?"

"Word of honor."

He looked at me with doubt in his insolent eyes. "After all, what do I know about your honor?" said he.

"Upon my word, Sir," I cried angrily, "you take very great liberties!

[ have never been so insulted in my life."

He seemed more interested than annoyed at my outbreak. "Round headed." he muttered, "brachycephalic, gray eyed, black haired, with suggestion of the negroid. Celtic, I presume?"

"I am an Irishman, Sir."

"Irish, Irish."

"Yes, Sir."

That, of course, explains it. Let me see, you have given me your fromise that my confidence will be respected? That confidence, I may say, will be far from complete. But I am prepared to give you a few indications which will be of interest."

The English "Once a Week," in April, 1871, told the following as a true story of recent happening: "There was a confirmation held at M—, and the Rishop stayed at the loase of a gentleman in the neighborhood, where the men servants were a buttler, a very young footman, and a page from church, went into the library to write some letters. When he had written them he rang the hell. The episcopal summons was answeed by the youthful footman, who was in a great state of nervousness, as he was going to be confirmed by his Lordsing that morning. The Bishop benignly asked, "Can anyone take those letters down to the post this morning" to which query the footman, in a very solemn tone of voice replied. The
